ROCK collection

'Stone, rock, and mountain textures are my special interests. I've been working on these textures in various materials for many years. I collected stones of different shapes and textures and drew their sketches to get to know them better. I try to make all my designs look and feel natural. I also think of them as interpreted images rather than replicas.'

Rock has a sculptural form that will make you turn around it with its lines, softness, and different caricatured versions. It's always intriguing to see how a delicate material like porcelain can turn into a rigid, durable, and light-permeable structure after being exposed to fire.

In Rock, which I produce entirely by hand, you can also see the unignorable reference and inspiration coming right from Magritte's paintings of the famous floating stone. This is why it makes a futuristic articulation even when it's off because it looks as if it's suspended in the air.'
